CONTENTS

- 203 China Gambles on Modernizing Through Urbanization. Kristen Looney and Meg Rithmire
The government is moving hundreds of millions of villagers into cities, hoping to avoid the unpredictable social and political changes that such migrations have led to in other developing countries.
- 210 China's Corruption Crackdown: War Without End? Andrew Wedeman
President Xi Jinping's drive against graft has lasted longer and cut deeper than previous campaigns, raising uncomfortable questions about the wealth accumulated by powerful officials and other elites.
- 217 A New President Aims to Change South Korea's Course David C. Kang
Moon Jae-in has vowed to engage with North Korea and end cozy ties between the government and powerful business conglomerates—tasks that are easier said than done.
- 223 Vietnam's Urgent Task: Adapting to Climate Change Pamela McElwee
A nation that is one of the most exposed to the effects of a changing climate has yet to develop plans that will protect its most vulnerable citizens rather than deepen inequality. First in a series on climate adaptation around the world.
- 230 The Tightening Authoritarian Grip on Thailand. Claudio Sopranzetti
While the military junta cracks down on street food vendors and others who contribute to a freewheeling culture, a new king aims to stamp out even mild criticism of the monarchy.
- 235 Trump and the Asia-Pacific: Do the Ties Still Bind? Mark Beeson
The blustery new president is taking an "America first" approach to international relations that ignores the history and benefits of US engagement in Asia. China is moving to fill the vacuum.

PERSPECTIVE

Civil society groups have helped meet social needs left unaddressed by the official response to the 2011 triple disaster. Their influence may be changing traditional patterns of rural neglect.

BOOKS

- 244 Chronicles of China's Spiritual Revival Robert P. Weller
A veteran journalist explores the surprisingly varied and vibrant array of religious groups that are now thriving in a country that is officially atheist but searching for something to believe in.
